

return to updates

THE MANDELA EFFECT

is another hoax

by Miles Mathis

First published June 20, 2017

For those of you who don't know, the Mandela Effect is a phenomenon first proposed in 2015, as an explanation for collective false memories. It is named for Nelson Mandela, allegedly an example of these false memories. According to Fiona Broome, many remember seeing Nelson Mandela's funeral on TV in the 1980s, despite the fact that he died in 2013. Wikipedia dismisses this as mistaken memories shared by many people, but Broome and others claim it is a sign of parallel universes or other strange anomalies. As usual, I have a third explanation, which is the correct one: you are being fucked with by both sides.

The first clue is the pushing of the parallel universes idea, which is also being pushed seriously by mainstream physics. They have been pushing this psy-op for decades, going back to the many-worlds hypothesis of Hugh Everett. It all started with quantum mechanics and the old Schrodinger's Cat conundrum, which you may have heard of. I have addressed it many times on my science site. I will not rehash it here, so if you don't know about it, you will have to take that link. Sometime later, physicist Hugh Everett proposed the solution to Schrodinger's Cat problem as the many-worlds hypothesis, which is a parallel-universes solution. In one universe, the cat is alive, in another the cat is dead. Which universe is chosen depends upon the actions of those opening the box.

Yes, that was the state of mainstream physics for most of the 20th century: rampant irrationality sold as science.

More recently, mainstream science has been pushing many offshoots of this project, including the "time is an illusion" gambit, the "universe is a hologram" gambit, and so on. I have also deconstructed those on my science site in the past decade, which is why this Mandela Effect psy-op was so easy for me to spot.

Basically, these psy-ops are aimed at my readers and other Truthers. They know that people have become aware of big distortions in their perceived realities. They know that people are coming to realize the media is one big lie and that much of what they have been taught is false. Well, to counter that, the mainstream is trying to deflect your attention away from the real cause of the distortion, and to these more sexy and esoteric causes. Instead of coming away with the simple truth—which is that those governing you are fantastic liars—they want you to think the distortion is even bigger than it is. They want you to think you are living in a hologram, or that reality doesn't exist, or that there are parallel universes, blahblahblah.

As I have said in previous papers, they have a lie to fit every taste. For some, they have the idea that Satanists are running the world. That is both sexy and ties into the religious residues of many. For others—those who fancy themselves scientists—they have these pseudo-scientific theories of parallel universes and so on. These theories are given weight by being tied to famous physicists, so they fool some people. But the correct answer has nothing to do with Satanism, parallel universes, holograms, aliens, or variant realities. It is simply that the modern financiers running the world have become hoaxers like none that preceded them. They have discovered that creating confusion leads to greater and greater profits. How? Via accelerated change. Confusion breaks all ties to the past and to reality, requiring a constant line of new fixes. It is called compensation. With everything in flux, there are no familiar things to rely on, so you have to buy a new life every week to compensate for your losses. The financiers have your new life mapped out for you before you even complain, and next week's new life is always more expensive and less satisfying than last week's.

You will understand the Mandela Effect best by visiting a youtube video by Texas Shrugged, which is what led me to write this paper. He makes it very easy. He opens and closes the video by telling you it proves the Mandela Effect is real, but ignore that. The video doesn't prove the Mandela Effect is real—if what you mean by real is either that there are false memories here or that there are parallel universes. What the video proves is that the project is real. It proves that the governors are changing small bits of recent history on purpose, to mess with your mind.

The video only addresses one example, that of Franco Columbo, bodybuilder from the 1980s, cohort of Lou Ferrigno, Arnold Schwarzenegger, and so on. But this is enough. It proves the project because we can clearly see it in a middle stage. We see them making the change, but not a complete change. At Wikipedia, we are now assured his name is Franco Columbu and always has been. Which is patently absurd. I guess his buddies are now named Loo Ferrignu and Arnuld Schwarzenugger. It is not just my memory and the memory of millions of people that it has been Columbo until now: there is a vast documentation, both on the internet and in print. The video shows that a websearch finds that Columbo outnumbers Columbu by five to one or more. So it isn't just a few people making a mistake. It is clearly a project caught in an early stage. Wikipedia and a few other big government sites have been flipped to Columbu, but they haven't got to the thousands of other mentions yet. Big Brother is rewriting history, but hasn't shredded or memoryholed the greater part.

You will say, “But wait, in that video at youtube, he says he found a 30-year-old book by Joe Weider, and it said Columbu.” Yeah. So why doesn't Texas Shrugged prove it, by showing us a picture? His video is full of screenshots, so it isn't like he doesn't know how to embed an image in his video. Of course, it would be easy to fake, but he doesn't even bother. So if you want confirmation, what do you do? You search on it, right? But if you search on the internet, you are already in their domain. They saw you coming, so we may assume the first thing they did is change all webimages of Joe Weider's book (supposing it ever really existed). So don't expect to prove anything that way. You say, “Well, I will go to Ebay, Amazon, and Abebooks, looking for old books there.” That won't work. Why? Because Abebooks is now owned by Amazon, and Amazon is owned by. . . Intelligence. I have shown you Jeff Bezos is a front for Intelligence. Ebay is owned by the same set of hoaxing people, so don't expect to find any proof one way or another there.

It's funny, because I just ran across another example of this total control earlier today, when I was looking for a copy of the book When Scotland was Jewish. Although the book is recent, I found it was impossible to find a reduced-price copy of this book. The cheapest used paperback was $40. Hardbacks started at above $100. I have found this with almost no other book (except other books they don't want you to read—like the book on the DuPonts, for instance). In an open and natural market, you would expect offerings at all price levels. This is what you find on almost any other commodity at Ebay. Since not all people know what they have or what the current market value is, you find lots way underpriced and way overpriced. But not this time. And it wasn't just Ebay, it was Amazon, Alibris, Biblio, and every other site. So I am supposed to believe that every single person in possession of a hardback copy of this book knows it is a hot commodity, worth from $100 to $800? No. That is not the right answer here. The right answer here is that—when necessary—they have the ability to totally control a market in any way they see fit. Online, this control is now 100%, and even offline the control is something above 90%. For instance, say you wanted to foil them, buying locally at a private sale. The first thing to do would be to check Craigslist, but they own that, too, of course. What about a library sale? You don't think Intel is involved in local libraries? Your only hope would be to buy from an individual, but how are you going to find out about it? A flier at Whole Foods? That would be your only hope, but even there the spooks are active. How long would a blacklisted flier last there? Not long. The only fliers that aren't checked are in the poor part of town, where the spooks don't troll as much. But good luck on finding book clients in the poor part of town. Actually, good luck on finding book clients anywhere.

My guess is this whole Mandela Effect project serves double-duty, since beyond advancing this dissolution of reality gambit, it also tests Intel's new levels of control. Only recently has Intelligence completed its full-spectrum control of all facets of society, and it probably needed a way to easily and quickly test that control. This project is perfect for that. As I showed you, it requires that they own and control all markets online. But it also requires they control local markets as well, including library book sales and things like that. Most people would never guess they have that kind of control or reach, but they do. I quit going to the public library many years ago, for that very reason. I could see spook fingerprints everywhere, and the place began to creep me out. This was when the computers went in and the books began going out. Remember how Bill Gates began donating computers to libraries in the 1990s? Just because he is a nice guy, right? The only time I go to the library now is to grab old books that are being jettisoned, so I see what is being thrown out. In short, the best old books are being removed and only the new propaganda is being kept. They would have been smarter if they had just burned the undesired books instead of selling them, but these people lose no chance for profit, no matter how small.

Finally, I will be told by some that they have checked their own shelves at home, finding indication of the Mandela Effect. They have found an old Berenstain Bears book or something, that they thought was Berenstein. I don't know about that one, since I never paid any attention to that book. But there is once again a simpler explanation, although you won't like it. No matter how weird your experience is in this matter, it doesn't require you to believe in parallel universes. You will say, “Then how do you explain it? Did they come into my house and replace one book with the other?”

Yes.

What, you thought your house was impregnable to the CIA? You believe these people can find Obama sin Ladun in a safe house in Pakistan but they can't get past your window locks? If only your dog could talk, the stories he could tell.

Most likely, you just misremembered. It happens all the times, even to the smartest of us. There are false memories, and I am not claiming otherwise. However, it is also true the government is fucking with you, on purpose, all the time, across the board, and nothing is too small for them to leave alone. You are not paranoid if you believe this, because they admit it. They admit that Intelligence now consists of millions of people hired to create chaos domestically. The budgets are huge, and many projects have been declassified, including Project Chaus, Project Cointelpru, Project Mockingbird, and on and on. And they don't just mess with top targets. As with NSA snooping, they now target everyone all the time. They don't just eavesdrop on dangerous people, they eavesdrop randomly. So even if you are a big nobody, they may have strolled through your house just because they could. If they were feeling especially naughty that day, they may have shuffled a few decks while they were there.

I am not telling you this to scare you. I am sure they have been through my house, but I am not scared. I look at it like some look at (their belief in) aliens: if they wanted to kill me, they would have done it already, so I assume they don't want to, or can't. So I don't really worry about it. I also don't worry about Project Chaus since it has never worked on me and I don't expect it to start working. I will be Miles Mathus tomorrow morning no matter what they do in my house or out of it, and nothing is going to change that.

I tell you this to remind you HOW THINGS ARE. You don't need ridiculous theories about parallel universes. You just need to know how the real universe, and the real world, works. Given that you are living in a world of constant lies and constant hoaxes, layers upon layers, you don't really need parallel universes to explain anything, do you?